A MAN CAN'T HAVE A PRIVATE MOMENT?

*Was never one to pay much attention to the toilet at home
Not that it was not worthy of a second look
Pastel walls, sleek sanitary ware, glossy vitrified tiles..
But then, it never inspired me to write poetry either
But lately when attending to calls of nature
I could sense the presence of another in the air
Though the cold feeling was initially unmistakable
I shrugged it off as a doubtful mind working overtime
Weeks later the feeling strongly persisted
At times, though not utterly disrobed, I felt stark naked
Was there someone really gawking at me?
Relishing my form and passing silent lewd comments
After days of restless vigil, I finally spotted the ogler
Sitting motionless on the window sill
Wide eyed with supple tail stiffly pointed up
Days of snowballed humiliation rolled out like an avalanche
I reached quickly for the mug, dunked it into the bucket
And recklessly flung water in the infuriating direction
Wind knocked out and utterly humiliated
The pervert darted outdoors with tail meekly between legs
To take fresh gulps of air and to never return again*
