7 Dirty Places at Home You Didn't Expect

Kitchen

Dish towels and sponges are especially problematic, because they hold moisture and are used for multiple tasks. Also, the kitchen sink is constantly wet, which creates the perfect environment for bacteria to grow.

Bathroom

Shocking, but true: The place to go get clean is quite dirty. The toilet, bathtub/shower, and sink are all obvious offenders. They are a fairly moist environment, so bacteria can grow.

Salt and Pepper Shaker

Could one of the dirtiest places at home be right on the table where everyone eats? Unfortunately, yes! The salt and pepper shakers get grabbed several times a day during all stages cooking, baking and eating, and by several different hands!

Toothbrush

Yes, in fact the toothbrush is filled with germs! Not only microbes from the toothbrush holder, but also, because it's usually left out on the counter and all bacteria from other areas of the bathroom land on it.

Computer Keyboard & Phone

An office desk has more bacteria than a toilet seat? Yes, and it's not surprising - the toilet is cleaned regularly. Computer keyboards and phones get touched way more than the toilet. They are also shared by multiple family members and guests, yet they are cleaned less often.

TV Remote Control

It's dropped on the floor, stuffed between the sofa cushions, caught on and sneezed at. Everyone in the house uses it.

Knobs, Handles and Switches

Whether it's turning a door handle, adjusting the stove, flipping on the lights, or running the faucet, every time when someone touches one of these knobs or handles, they leave residue that can spread germs all around the house.
